Detailed Action

Rejected Claims

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(e) the invention was described in (1) an application for patent, published under section 122(b), by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent or (2) a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent, except that an international application filed under the treaty defined in section 351(a) shall have the effects for purposes of this subsection of an application filed in the United States only if the international application designated the United States and was published under Article 21(2) of such treaty in the English language.

Claims 9 and 10 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Manchala.

With respect to claim 9, Manchala teaches a printer (11) comprising: print head, as the means for printing images, see figure 3; Manchala teaches a shedder 14 as the means for cutting; software application as the means for sensing authentication (such as a pin and password of operation) as the means for characterizing a document (bank check); and means for sending the authentication data (col. 4, line 65- col. 5, line 3) to a server (10); causing the cutter to cut the document to invalidation, col. 2, lines 40-49; sending data (NVRAM entry data) representing completion of the invalidation of the document to the server (col. 2, lines 38-50).

With respect to claim 10, Manchala teaches a method for invalidating a document (check), comprising: sensing authentication characteristics (pin and password of operation), see col. 3, lines 10-15 regarding a check, see col. 2, lines 17-30; sensing authentication characteristics of the document; outputting a sensor signal (MICR data or the magnetic operation) corresponding to the sensed characteristics; sending authentication data (col. 4, line 65-col. 5, line 3 representing the sensor signal to a (application server 10); causing a cutter 14 to invalidate the check (document); and sensing data NVRAM entry data of the invalidation of the document to the server (client 10), see col. 2, lines 31-50.

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 14-16 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Manchala in view of the Well Known Prior Art (Official Notice).

With respect to claims 14 and 15, Machala teaches a printer and a means to cut documents, however, the location of how the document is placed in the cutter is not known with respect to the printer.

However, applicant has not submitted a reason that a cutter incorporated in a printer would solve a problem anticipated in the art.

Since, the shredder 14 is provided with the printer 11, one of skill would have known to make the shredder integral with the printer for the convenience of shredding documents which are regarded as invalidated within the printer housing.

With respect to claim 16, Machala teaches a cutter and receiving signals to initiate the cutting of the document. Machala teaches sensing information on a magnetic strip. The magnetic strip contains a code for determining if a check should be cut (shredded), see col. 2, lines 44- 63. Hence, Machala uses a magnetic sensor to sensing the verification data regarding the shredding of the document.
